Women's Federation Active In Clean-Up Campaign.

All owners or agents of vacant lots are requested to begin at once the clearing of all trash and rubbish from their property, and to comply with the orders of the City Council in the clean-up work on Saturday. This is a very important step in city building and it is the work which the Federation is going to push from the very start.

Mrs. Thomas Currie, president of the Federation, has expressed the desire that every woman in the Federation consider herself a committee to see that all trash and rubbish of all kinds are cleared from her block and neighborhood, and by so doing it will not work a hardship on the chairman in the various districts for the more people there are interested in a cause the more can be accomplished.

The following ladies have been named as permanent chairmen in their district to see after the removing of all trash and rubbish and to look after this part of the Federation work in the city: Miss Nettie Wheatley, Mesdames Huff, Venable, Haney, Oscar Schilling Newbold, Harrington, Gist, Dohoney, Charles Pearson, Madison, Roscoe, Neely, M. H. Hardin, C. D. Jackson, W. R. Hollis, R. L. Shelton, L. O. Thompson, Will A. Miller, A. C. Covington, Rymann, Earl Cobb, Kate Patton, H. M. Beverley, C. T. Callahan, W. A. Christian, W. L. Kendrick, 1119 Harrison street, and formed plans which will be put in execution at once. These ladies will make a house-to-house canvass of Amarillo, distributing literature on their work, and the housekeepers of the city are requested to answer the door promptly so as not to delay the work and to read carefully the papers which will be handed them. The ladies will begin today and will cover the entire city by Friday.

SWAT THE FLY AND SWAT HIS BREEDING PLACES

The following is from an article written by Dr. Leonard Keen Hirschberg and if it does not inspire every reader to energetic efforts in a fly swatting campaign nothing will. He says:

"The summer about to dawn is the tenth anniversary of our conclusive conviction and tangible proof that the common nuisance and ubiquitous plague, the pestiferous housefly, produces many dangerous maladies, such as typhoid, cholera, dysentery, infant ailments and the like. True enough ever since the government report about typhoid fever among American soldiers, in the Spanish war, the housefly was fairly well known to be responsible for the spread of that infection. It was not, however, until the researches of the ensuing years had accumulated, that the fly's guilt was established beyond the cavil of doubt.

"The proboscis or what you might call the tongue of the housefly, is a most pernicious organ. To change a Shakespearean saw, 'hell hath no fury like the housefly's tongue.' Beside it the scandal monger's tongue is peaches and cream. Because the common fly cannot chew, food must be served up to it in liquid form. In other words, a fly is always on a soft, liquid or fever diet. As a fly alights upon food it sticks out its tongue or proboscis by means of air sacs, or vacuum cleaners, which blow out the proboscis just as you blow into a glove to expand the fingers. Another pump of the fly's mouth sucks in the liquid food mixed with the fly's saliva. The food passes through the alimentary canal and the undesirable parts are shot forth as flecks of dust and moistened dirt from the under surface of the fly's body.

"It has been abundantly confirmed by experiments that the fly not only stores up food for days and weeks at a time in its crop, but it also vomits fresh as well as old food very often. A fly will thus regurgitate out through its mouth and proboscis food that is too solid for it to take. Indeed, flies are so filthy in their habits that they would vomit forth and reswallow their food many times. The vomit spots may be seen on white surfaces or window panes and easily distinguished from spots of waste matter discharged by the fly, because they are much lighter in color than the latter. You may thus picture to yourself what takes place when a fly sopped with a liquid diet of typhoid material, tuberculosis, sputum or scarlet rich milk, hops gaily here and there on your berries, butter sugar bowl and kitchen utensils. The apparently clean and harmless fly that idly glides into your kitchen from the passing garbage cart, in order to have a bit of your bread, your sugar, your meat, or your butter, vomits a few times here and there wherever it alights. Briefly, if a fly wishes to slip some nourishment from your table it must vomit several times, at least, upon the food it craves. Some of its ejected saliva and vomit may be the remnants of field repasts obtained some days previously. Moreover, the sticky, grey cushions upon a fly's feet are literally swarming with bacteria and other disease spreading filth. The much admired and graceful act of a fly walking upside down is due to this mucilaginous material present upon the insect's feet. The footpads of a fly are so glutinous that they take up part of anything they come in contact with. Every known disease germ and contagion has been recovered from the soles of a fly's foot. Since the abiding places of the musca domestica are stables, barns, manure heaps, rubbish boxes, outhouses and any decaying animal or vegetable matter you may well imagine what variety of germs may be encountered upon a fly's feet and inside its hollow tongue and mouth.

"Such delectable places are the breeding spots of the mother fly. She lays her eggs in a series of from 100 to 200 at a time. She usually lives long enough to rear many thousands of progeny, half of which in turn also become aggressive, egg-laying mothers. One fly killed in April is equal to the combined onslaught and destruction of billions of flies in July and August. The boy or girl who destroys the early flies of April and May can carve himself or herself a belt with the motto as it of 'A Million at One Blow.' For, potentially every mother fly today will be responsible for billions on billions in August.

"All of the mighty milk crusades with their aims of pure, undefiled and germ free milk will go for naught if a swat the fly campaign is not vigorously maintained all through the season. You may have a milk so greenly perfect that not a bacteria is in it, yet if there be a fly about ready to pounce upon an infant's lip on its bottle, nipple or into his hand, then all the other anticipated precautions will have been absolutely nullified.

"The rapid substitution of the garbage for the manure pile, stables, cow sheds and barnyards has gone a long way to reduce the number of flies in American cities. The new city ordinance which require all garbage cans to be kept under cover
